

Sandra Sigley

“For me, creating art is replicating my visual impressions of the world through drawing and painting. The process always begins with observing, looking, seeing and feeling. An image or scene that really moves me, makes me want to express it my way.

Inspired and influenced by the Great Impressionists, I am always looking to saturate my paintings with color. I search for every hint of color that I can find in a scene and exaggerate it to create a bold and vibrant painting.

When people see my work, I'd like them to want to know more about it: where is this? what was happening at the time? when did this take place? I'd like them to want to step inside to explore and continue the story that I started.”
